The Central Mine.

The Central copper mine at Lake Superior is coming into notice once more and bids fair to take a new lease of life after having been almost abandoned a few years since. The mine is under the Stanton management; has been one of the most profitable of the Boston-owned group at the lake, and has returned a large aggregate in dividends. The company has but 20,000 shares of a $25 par value. The stock never was active on the exchange, but has appeared occasionally and has participated more or less in the periodical "booms" which have distinguished the Boston market of late years. We do not recall that it has sold this year; $10 is the last quotation which we find, with $16 in 1892, the highest of late years, and $35 in 1890, the record. The last dividend was paid February 2, 1891, and was $1 per share. In 1890 $1 was paid, in 1889, $2, in 1888, $3.50, in 1887, $2, and in 1886, $2. The report for the calendar year 1895 showed 379,020 pounds of copper produced and sold at slightly under 11 cents per pound. Expenses were $11,481 greater than receipts, and net surplus January 1, 1896, was $65,140, or better than $3 per share. The 1895 report said: "It would now seem that our only chance for success would be to extend one or more of the levels into this unexplored ground (above the conglomerate bed, extending about two miles in a southerly direction on the course of the vein before reaching the boundary line) in the hope of finding another ore body, and we have reopened the 21st level, and it is now extending southward on the vein with this object in view." Nearly a year after the above was written comes the following, which we find in a Lake paper this week: "A notable fact in connection with the Central mine is that at present the entire product is taken from the 21st level of No. 2 shaft. No better illustration of the outlook in this level can be given than the fact that last month's production of over forty-six tons was the largest for the present year. This level is now extended south to a distance of 833 feet. A force of men is engaged in reopening and timbering the 16th, 17th and 19th levels, and when these are opened in as far as the 21st level it is hoped the production will be at least double that of the present."

Now see what this current production means, approximately. Forty-six tons of mineral per month means, say, twenty-eight tons of fine copper, or 336 tons per year, equal to 672,000 pounds. A net profit of 3 cents per pound would give $1 per share. In other words, it would seem that if copper can be produced at 8 cents per pound and sold to average 11 cents, the Central bids fair to get back in sight of dividends. Of course, it does not follow that it can get 11 cents or that it can produce it at a cost of as low as 8 cents. However, there is the outlook for increase of production and the possibility of better prices for copper in 1897. Granted a product of 800,000 pounds of copper per annum, a price of 11 cents average for the year, and a cost of 8 1/2 cents, and $20,000, or $1 per share, would appear. This is the central position and outlook in brief, and while it is too early, of course, to begin to talk about dividend resumption, it is plain that the famous old mine bids fair to take a new lease of life, and it yet may reward stockholders for continuing their investment in the shares. The company has paid a total of $1,970,000 in dividends since its organization, or $98.50 per share.—Boston Transcript.
